

Immigration Law

Plunkett Cooney assists individuals and businesses in Michigan in many areas of immigration law, including family-based and work-sponsored immigration. Our attorneys assist businesses with the transfer of personnel to the United States, and this process involves procuring work-related visas and visa extensions, labor certifications and permanent residence cards.

The firm's approach focuses on each applicant's background, work history and education to match the applicant with the proper immigration process. This measured approach often streamlines and increases the probability of government approval. We also represent individuals who seek asylum or face removal and deportation proceedings.

Whether our individual clients seek to work temporarily, live permanently in the United States, sponsor an individual from abroad to work in Michigan, or need legal advice regarding immigration law issues, Plunkett Cooney's immigration lawyers can advise on a course of action.

Inquiries regarding the firm's services for non-U.S. based companies can be directed to Arturo Alfaro.
