Plunkett Cooney bankruptcy attorney Douglas C. Bernstein will be among a distinguished panel of municipal leaders, educators and attorneys on Nov. 21 at Wayne State University examining municipal bankruptcies across the country and what they portend for the City of Detroit.

“This is certainly an exciting program, and I’m very happy to be among the panelists,” said Bernstein, who is the managing partner of Plunkett Cooney’s Banking, Bankruptcy & Creditors’ Rights Practice Group. “Wayne State has done a great job assembling some of the leading voices on municipal bankruptcy, including some of the leaders who have lived through it.”

The program, titled: “Bankruptcy – What Could it Mean for Detroit? Voices From Other Places,” will take place from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m. in the Law School Building Auditorium, which is located at 471 Palmer, Detroit, MI 48202. The session is part of the university’s Forum on Contemporary Issues in Society (FOCIS) program, which is directed by Dr. Irvin D. Reid, president emeritus of Wayne State.

The first panel discussion will feature elected public officials and educators, who have participated in the municipal bankruptcy process, including:

- Mayor James DiOSSa of Central Falls, Rhode Island
- Mayor Linda Thompson of Harrisburg, Pennsylvania
- Deputy City Solicitor Matthew Jerzyk of Providence, Rhode Island
- Adjunct Professor Robert Benedetti, Center for California Studies, CSU Sacramento and professor emeritus, University of the Pacific

The second panel discussion will feature Bernstein and other noted attorneys from across the country, who have represented petitioners, pensioners, retirees, bondholders and their representatives in municipal and other forms of bankruptcy. The panelists will include:
