Plunkett Cooney partner Glenn C. Ross was recently named a Fellow of the American College of Mortgage Attorneys (ACMA).

The newly elected Fellows will be formally inducted into membership at ACMA's Annual Meeting on Sept. 17-19 at the Ritz-Carlton, Bacara in Santa Barbara, California.

Formed in 1974, the ACMA is comprised of 500 lawyers in North America who are experts in mortgage law. ACMA Fellows work in seven Canadian provinces, all 50 U.S. states, the District of Columbia, Mexico and Puerto Rico. They are private practice, in-house, and public-sector lawyers with substantial experience, as well as professors of law.

The Fellows' work typically focuses on real estate acquisition, development, financing, leasing and disposition across various sectors, including commercial, retail, office, industrial, hospitality, multi-family housing and other areas. Their transactions involve interactions with lenders, borrowers, developers, buyers, sellers, tenants, landlords and joint ventures.

Ross, who serves as Plunkett Cooney's Business Transactions & Planning Practice Group Leader, has 15 years of experience representing clients in numerous aspects of general corporate law, business and commercial matters, and mergers and acquisitions, as well as in transactions related to complex financing. He provides counsel and advice regarding a variety of financing sources for real estate projects and business transactions, including the use of tax credits, conventional construction and permanent financing loans, Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac loans, 221(d)(4) and 221(f) FHA loans, HOME funds, private activity bonds and other federal, state and local financing sources.

A 2011 cum laude graduate of Wayne State University Law School, Ross is a member of the State Bar of Michigan. He received his undergraduate degree, with honors, from Michigan State University in 2005.
