Areas of Practice

Angeles is a skilled trial lawyer, who helps companies defend against employees' claims of discrimination, retaliation, and unpaid wages. She also helps companies protect their confidential information and defend against claims alleging misappropriation of trade secrets.

In her preventative practice, Angeles advises employers on compliance with federal, state, and local laws, drafts policies and employment agreements, provides guidance on corrective actions, and counsels clients on proper documentation and best practices. She represents companies of all sizes and works with in-house counsel and human resources personnel to proactively avoid litigation.

Angeles recently helped secure a complete defense verdict for a Fortune 100 company against claims of disability discrimination, retaliation, and failure to accommodate. Shortly after this win, Angeles obtained complete dismissal of a case alleging race and disability discrimination and retaliation based on arguments made at the final pretrial conference. Angeles has also successfully opposed conditional certification of a wage and hour case alleging unpaid overtime and misclassification under the Fair Labor Standards Act.

She helps companies navigate inquiries from the Department of Labor. She successfully negotiated to significantly reduce penalties imposed by the DOL for alleged misclassification of employees and improper retention of tips. Angeles also has experience helping companies navigate investigations by the Department of Justice Immigrant and Employee Rights Section stemming from Form I-9 employment verification practices and the use of E-Verify. Angeles understands clients' needs and is adept at learning how each client's business operates in order to provide the most effective guidance in a timely and efficient manner.

Angeles is also an experienced commercial litigator. Angeles represents companies in disputes over non-compete agreements, misappropriation of trade secrets, breach of fiduciary duty, and other breach of contract claims. Angeles also represents clients in a variety of other types of commercial disputes where documents, witnesses, and/or clients require fluency in Spanish.
