David Edelstein, a partner in the Vorys Cincinnati office, will present on current and expected PFAS-related litigation trends with experts from the Antea Group. Per- and poly- fluorinated alkyl substances (PFAS) are omnipresent, newsworthy, and front-and-center for federal and state environmental lawmakers.

PFAS-specific regulations are evolving, triggering new business risks for most organizations. More immediately, private litigation continues to grow and has been occurring even without PFAS-specific regulations. Some states are also taking action in the absence of federal regulations. This presentation will highlight the importance of maintaining legal privileges when investigating potential PFAS-related matters, provide best practices for managing risk and more.
