Alycia Broz, a partner in the Vorys Columbus office and a member of the litigation group, has received the Social Justice Impact Award from Northwestern Pritzker School of Law. According to Northwestern, the award was established for alumni “who have exemplified leadership in their use of the law to ensure individuals and groups receive fair treatment and share equitably in the benefits of society and in access to justice; and/or have achieved notable social or racial justice impact.” Broz is one of 21 distinguished alumni who will be honored at the annual Alumni Awards dinner.

Broz, who graduated from the law school in 1998, is very active in the Columbus community and has served on the boards for numerous non-profit organizations including the King Arts Complex, the YWCA Columbus, and Big Brother Big Sisters of Central Ohio.

Broz has provided strategic advice and counsel to clients across the country for more than two decades. She represents companies and individuals in a wide variety of complex litigation matters. Broz has extensive experience in antitrust, commercial, class action, and civil rights litigation.
