Debbie draws on her clinical nursing experience to provide unique perspective and understanding in the defense of clients facing complex medical malpractice claims.

OVERVIEW

Drawing on her many years of clinical nursing experience, Debbie Weinrich focuses her practice on defending complex medical malpractice claims, many of which involve catastrophic injuries which implicate the possibility of excess verdicts and related coverage. She is responsible for developing and preparing all aspects of the defenses on behalf of a variety of healthcare clients, including physicians, advanced practice providers, intraoperative neuromonitoring specialists, perfusionists, nurses and other healthcare personnel, as well as hospitals, multi-site healthcare systems and physicians' practice groups. She often represents private healthcare companies which contract with other healthcare institutions including hospitals and long-term care facilities. In addition to medical malpractice matters, Debbie's practice includes an assortment of general litigation, such as construction litigation, premises liability and other personal injury matters. She has tried numerous cases to verdict.

Debbie practiced as a registered nurse for nearly 10 years, principally in the area of Maternal-Newborn Services and was certified in inpatient obstetrics. She also has administrative experience. This background provides a distinct advantage in the investigation, discovery and trial phases of litigation, not only substantively, but also from an emotional standpoint for the practitioners experiencing litigation.

While her Labor & Delivery experience makes her uniquely qualified to handle complex obstetrical matters, and she has extensive experience handling such cases, she does not limit her practice only to cases involving catastrophic birth injuries. To the contrary, Debbie is experienced in handling cases throughout the healthcare spectrum such as those stemming from emergency care, cardiac care and procedures, neuro and other surgical care, as well as wound care.

Debbie has also developed significant experience with issues concerning electronic medical records and is often asked to speak on the topic, including about assorted aspects of healthcare documentation. She is a Certified HIPAA
